COURSE DESCRIPTION

Have you ever wanted to attend a seminar where everything about breast procedures would be discussed? Well, this is it! From screening mammograms to nuclear studies; from ordering regulations to frequency rules; from 3-D rendering to CAD! We will look at the various percutaneous breast procedures and the different devices used to perform them, in order to be able to determine how to correctly code these procedures. When is it appropriate to separately code for mammograms performed in conjunction with breast biopsies? It's less frequently than you probably think! We'll discuss the differences between FNA and core biopsies, how to code Mammotome biopsies, needle localization wire placements, metallic clip placements, radiograph of surgical specimen, and various guidance procedures, i.e., stereotactic, mammographic, ultrasound, CT, & MRI.

You will learn to:

- Understand what latitude is afforded radiologists for performing additional diagnostic studies following an abnormal screening mammogram.
- Discuss what documentation is necessary for 3-D rendering when performed with a breast MRI
- Understand the difference between nuclear scintimammography and sentinel node identification
